

YUKON GOVERNMENT PHOTO

How fresh are your vegetables?

Buying local produce means your food doesn't have to travel so far to reach your fork. That means fewer carbon dioxide emissions created by transportation – and a lower impact on climate change. Plus you'll know your food really is fresh.

To find out just how much is grown in the Yukon, come by the Fireweed Community Market, Shipyards Park, Whitehorse, 3 to 8pm every Thursday until September 13.

Or go to www.yukonag.ca and download the Yukon Agriculture Products Guide to see what products are available in your area.

Yukon Agricultural Association

CREDIT: YUKON GRAIN FARM

We don't just grow potatoes

Yukon farmers can supply you with everything from beef to beetroot and hogs to honey – as well as daily staples such as bread, eggs and cheese.

To find out just how much is grown in the Yukon, come by the Fireweed Community Market, Shipyards Park, Whitehorse, 3 to 8pm every Thursday until September 13.

Or go to www.yukonag.ca and download the Yukon Agriculture Products Guide to see what products are available in your area.

Yukon Agricultural Association

YUKON GOVERNMENT PHOTO

Farmers have a steak in the community

There are over 170 farms in the Yukon.

Sales from agricultural produce total around $4 million each year.

Daily staples such as bread, eggs, cheese, vegetables, poultry and meat are all produced in the Yukon.

To find out who your Yukon producers are, go to www.yukonag.ca and download the Yukon Agriculture Products Guide, or come by one of our markets:

Fireweed Community Market, Shipyards Park, Whitehorse, 3 to 8pm every Thursday until September 13

Dawson Market on the River, Dawson City, every Saturday until September 15

Yukon Agricultural Association

